

Robert Edwin Waldron died of cancer on October 25, 2000, in an Ann Arbor, Michigan, hospice. Bob was a force in that state's politics and his impact is still felt in the way the legislature operates, according to the obituary in The Detroit News. He left school in 1941, joined the U.S. Army Air Force the following year and was discharged in 1946 as a captain in the 9th Air Force. He returned to Dartmouth, received his degree and went on to graduate from law school at the University of Michigan. He was an attorney, specializing in constitutional law for 20 years, served for 16 years in the Michigan House of Representatives and was a prominent member of the state's Republican Party. After leaving the legislature, Bob handled governmental affairs for major petroleum suppliers in Michigan for 19 years. He is survived by his wife, Helen, son Bill, daughters Mary and Peggy and five grandchildren.

1943

Freeman Forbes Dodge died August 12, 2000, of heart failure at his home in South Wellfleet, Massachusetts. "Bob" was born in Boston and after attending Dartmouth lived most of his life in the Provincetown/Truro/Wellfleet section of Cape Cod. Bob built the Sorcerer's Apprentice Handcraft Shop and the present Berta Walker Gallery, which he ran until the 1970s. Later he ran an antique business and, with son Forbes, the restaurant Yesteryears in Wellfleet. He is survived by his wife of 54 years, Mary Ellen (Van Dusen), son Forbes and five grandchildren. He was predeceased by child Robin.

Charles Edmund Miller died October 27, 2000, of natural causes in Prineville, Oregon. Charlie attended the Thacher School in Ojai, California, before entering Dartmouth. Charlie left after freshman year and served in the Army Air Corps during WWII in Italy and North Africa. After the war he worked in his family's logging business, Young's Bay Lumber, in Warrenton; Stebco in Vancouver, Washington; and was a co-founder of Flightcraft. He ranched for 35 years in central Oregon as owner of several ranches. His philanthropy included gifts to The High Desert Museum, Lewis & Clark College, The Oregon Institute of Technology, Catlin Gabel School in Portland and Mitchell School in Wheeler County. He is survived by his wife of 54 years, Mary; daughters Cameron, Wendy and Jessie; son, C. Edmund; two sisters; nine grandchildren and one great-grandson.

1944

Charles D.J. Regan, eminent Boston eye surgeon, died September 29, 2000, of lung cancer and emphysema at Metro West Medical Center in Natick, Massachusetts. He was a graduate of Boys Latin School. At Dartmouth he was Phi Beta Kappa. Following two years at Dartmouth Medical School he transferred to Harvard Medical School, receiving his M.D. in 1946. He served as a lieutenant in the Navy Medical Corps in China, where he met his wife, Patricia, in Shanghai. He specialized in diseases of the retina. He was on the staff of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary for nearly 50 years, serving as chief of ophthalmology, chief of retina service, director of residency training and a member of the eye service executive committee. In 1967 he received acclaim for repairing the vision of the damaged eye of Boston Red Sox slugger Tony Conigliaro. He leaves Patricia; daughters Joan, Claire and Maria; son James '74 and two grandchildren.

1945

Vincent Canby, one of 45's more illustrious graduates, died of cancer on October 15, 2000, at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City. As senior film critic for The New York Times and, since 1993, as the theater critic, Vincent was the ubiquitous, anonymous man in the aisle seat known for his lively wit and sophisticated humor, taking it all in tonight for a million readers tomorrow. Following WW II service as the skipper of a Navy LST in the South Pacific, he returned to Dartmouth to graduate in 1947. He began his writing career in 1948 with the Chicago Journal of Commerce as assistant to the drama critic. After a brief stint in New York with the Motion Picture Herald, Vincent began his 35-year tenure with The Times in 1965. Never married, he is survived by cousin Ann Barker Trufant.

Edward Stanton Russell Jr. died on August 2, 2000. His preparatory schools for Dartmouth included Culver Military Academy and the Choate School. During World War II he served more than three years on active duty as a B-24 bomber pilot, flying more than 50 missions in the European and African theaters and being awarded the Air Medal with clusters. Remaining in the Air Force Reserve, he finally retired in 1968 with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Alumni records indicate his career had been largely concentrated in the home building and real estate development fields in the Woodbridge, Connecticut, area. He leaves a sister, Mrs. R.N. Whitlock.

1950

Charles Hamilton Davison died at his home in Vero Beach, Florida, on November 2, 2000, after a long bout with cancer. Charlie majored in history, was active in Phi Delta Theta and did his senior year at Tuck School. After graduation he earned his M.B.A. from NYU. He became a managing partner of the regional offices of Peat, Marwick and Mitchell in Providence and Chicago, followed by promotion to deputy chairman for U.S. operations in New York City. In 1983 he retired as vice chairman of Smith, Barney Harris, Upham in New York City and acquired a Providence greeting card company. For Dartmouth he served on the Alumni Council, was an overseer of Tuck School, was a club president and a member of the Alumni Fund's capital gifts committee. Charlie leaves his wife, Lessie, sons Charles, Lang '83 and Andrew and three grandchildren.

1951

Ernest Egon Kramer died of kidney cancer July 26, 2000, at his home in Centreville, Maryland, where he had farmed for many years. Egon was born in Australia, but grew up in Greenwich, Connecticut, and attended the Pomfret School. At Dartmouth he majored in history, joined Theta Delta Chi and was a standout on the varsity crew, a member of the winning duo that took the first-place trophy in the paired oar race at the Henley Regatta in England. In December 1951 Egon married Anne Pamela Wahl, a graduate of Bryn Mawr. He served with the Central Intelligence Agency from 1951 until 1954. Then he became a farmer near Penn Yan in upstate New York, moving to Maryland in 1958 and continuing to farm in the Centreville vicinity on the eastern edge of the Chesapeake Bay. His wife predeceased him. He is survived by sons Matthew '78 and Zachary and daughters Amadea, Alexandra and Theodora.

1952

Bill Biggs died in St. Louis, Missouri, in August 2000, marking the end of a courageous and complicated life. He was a diabetic, which led to heart, vascular and kidney disease. He developed non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, which Pat and the six children thought he had beaten. But then, in the last year, he had a mini stroke. He received a heart transplant in September 1994, and then led a very active life for six years. Bill, with Kent Calhoun '52 and the late Jim Kolb '53, was the heart of the Dartmouth basketball team in the early 1950s. Bill was the top scorer. After Navy service Bill went to work in the steel industry, first for Ryerson in Chicago and then J&L Steel in St. Louis. He was a spokesperson for the St. Louis Organ Transplant Agency. Bill will be greatly missed, but his quiet and unassuming nature will be remembered by his many friends and classmates.

Roger Malkin, who died November 22, 2000, of cancer, had a life of achievement for his community, the College and his family. A Connecticut native, Roger was transplanted to Scott, Mississippi, where he led Delta and Pine Land Co. (NYSE) to a controlling position of 60 percent of the U.S. cottonseed market, employing more than 550 people with operations here and abroad. He was honored by his community and the state for the dynamic business growth for the Delta. In 1995 he established a scholarship fund at Dartmouth to educate qualified students of D&PL employees living in Mississippi and other cotton-belt states, one of the largest single scholarships at Dartmouth. Roger graduated from the College in 1952 and from Tuck in 1953. Roger is survived by two children, brother Peter, two granddaughters and companion Barbara Jakobson.

Clarence Y. Palitz Jr. died in November 2000 following a brief illness. A varsity swimmer, he graduated as an economics major and received a business degree from NYU business school. He