

the time of his death, Don was assistant to the Public Service Company of New Ham had been associated with the company for 25 years. Don was an economics major at I and had served in the army during the Ko All members of the class extend their cond Eva and their three children.

Harry L. McCaffrey
10-13-79

We belatedly report the death of ROBERT KEINEKE on November 17, 1977, in Pawling, N.Y. Bob had devoted his life to teaching. The class extends its sympathy to his wife Cecelia and their two daughters.

— Newtown.

In 1950 he married Elizabeth Newell, a graduate of Smith; they had a daughter and a son who survive him.

1951

ROBERT LIVINGSTON COON, a professor of French and head of the Department of Modern Languages at Kansas State University in Manhattan since 1971, died on December 9, 1979.

After graduating from Dartmouth, Bob received his M.A. in 1953 and Ph.D. in 1961 from Princeton University. From 1953 to 1955, he was in the U.S. Army. Before joining the K.S.U. faculty in 1971, he taught at the University of Southern California and at Vassar College and chaired the Modern Languages Department at Sweet Briar College.

Bob was a national leader in the testing and evaluating of language students. He authored a nation-wide testing program through the College Entrance Examination Board of the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., and for almost ten years he served as chief reader (director) for ETS's Advanced Placement Examination in French. In that capacity, he analyzed testing methods, helped to revise national testing standards, and introduced new evaluative techniques. Bob was a member of the Modern Language Association, the Renaissance Society, the American Association of Teachers of French, and the American Association of University Professors.

He is survived by his wife Joan and four children.

Members of the class were saddened recently when they learned of the untimely death of THEODORE FOUCAR EBERLE on November 13, 1979. Ted was in Hanover with his wife Ann at 51's 25th reunion several years ago, when he enjoyed a pleasant visit with his friends and classmates. This a difficult obituary to write, as it deals with a life so full of promise during college days, but one that did not turn out according to logical expectations.

Ted was born and grew up along the banks of the Ohio River in the city of Cincinnati. He lived there for the major portion of his lifetime, excluding his years at Dartmouth, a brief stint in the Air Force, and several years in upstate New York.

"Fouc," as he was sometimes affectionately called by his Dartmouth colleagues, was a cheerful, bright, and industrious student. He graduated cum laude from Dartmouth and received his M.B.A. from the Tuck School. He was an excellent athlete — one of only five varsity football players in his class to win his "D" for three consecutive years. He played both ways: as an offensive tackle who could block well and as a strong defensive lineman. He won honorable mention all-Ivy in both his junior and senior years. During his graduate year at Amos Tuck School, he served as a freshman football coach under Tuss McLaughry.

Furthermore, Ted was a member of the first Dartmouth rugby team, which played its opening game in the Bermuda College rugby tournament without the benefit of ever playing the sport before.

Ted will be remembered by those of us who knew him during our undergraduate days for his generosity and friendly manner.

Peter B. Bogardus '51

HARRY LEWIS MCCAFFREY died suddenly of a heart attack on October 13, 1979. Harry chaired the English Department at Newtown, Conn., High School at his death.

At Dartmouth, Harry was active with the newspaper and radio station, was a member of Sigma

1954

EVERETT TENNANT RATTRAY died at his home in East Hampton, Long Island, on January 14. The cause of death was cancer, first discovered in 1972.

At the time of his death, Ev was editor and publisher of the East Hampton Star, "one of the liveliest and most literate weekly newspapers in the nation" according to the New York Times. As editor, he availed himself of the prerogative of writing his own obituary, which was read at his funeral and published in the Star on the day of his burial. The following borrows liberally from that text.

Ev was a 12th-generation resident of eastern Long Island and a graduate of East Hampton High School who "chose Dartmouth and never regretted it. In fact, he would find himself walking across the Hanover Plain quite often thinking how lucky he was to be in such a place and attending such a college. The feeling never left him."

After graduation, Ev spent three years in the United States Navy and a year at Columbia University's Graduate School of Journalism. He then returned to East Hampton and the Star, which he ran for the next 20 years.

Ev was an outspoken, articulate champion of the rights of the individual. Of the many causes pressed by the Star, Ev was proudest of his early, printed opposition to the war in Vietnam. Some of these causes were "losers" but, as always, Ev had no regrets.

In 1979, he published a book, The South Fork, the Land and People of Eastern Long Island. Ev spent most of his adult life fighting to preserve the great stretches of eastern Long Island beaches in their undeveloped state. He was a member of the Fire Island Natural Seashore Advisory Commission and a director of the East Hampton Historical Society and was instrumental in the establishment of the Town Marine Museum at Amagansett.

"He left life with a few regrets, mainly concerning his family, wife, and not living to see his children as adults, but with no particular fears that his sins, which included a fondness for martinis, smoking (he had quit . . . in 1965 . . .), and possible rigidity in applying the rules of good newspapering to his own product, would make restless what he could only imagine to be a deep and endless sleep."

Ev is survived by his wife Helen, who had assumed increasing responsibility for the Star operations in recent years, three children, his sister, and his brother David '57.

Representing Dartmouth at the funeral were his brother and Peter S. Dohanos '53 as pallbearers, and classmates Bradford P. Borden, Richard L. Bufington, and Richard M. Page.

Richard M. Page '54

1957

It was saddening to learn of the passing of RICHARD PATTERSON LANAHAN on December 21, 1979, of diabetic complications. He died in Princeton Junction, N.J., where he had made his home. Dick was active in racquet sports at Dartmouth and was a four-year member of the Newman Club as well as a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

The owner of Richard's, a quality footwear store, Dick was also very active in civic and Dartmouth affairs. He had served as secretary, vice president, and president of the Dartmouth Club of Central New Jersey and was especially keen on recruiting quality scholars and athletes for Dartmouth.