Richard Astor Weaver

died of cancer after a brief illness on April 9 in the Buffalo General Hospital. He was born in Buffalo and was a lifelong resident of the area. He came to Dartmouth from Mercersburg Academy in July 1944, one of five in his class to attend Dartmouth. After serving in the U.S. Navy Dick returned to Hanover and graduated in 1949. He was a member of Sigma Nu and served as its president his senior year. He spent much time skiing and hiking in the mountains. These activities were avidly pursued the rest of his life as was golf until his marriage.

After graduation he entered the A.H. Weaver Lumber Company, a family business in Buffalo, which he expanded into gymnasium and industrial flooring. He was noted in the industry for his innovative uses of wood and construction materials, and was president of the company at the time of his death.

Dick was an active board member of several civic and religious organizations that provide crisis assistance to persons in need. He enjoyed meeting, knowing, and helping people. His open friendliness will be missed.

He is survived by his wife, Norma, and sons Bradley and Thomas in Eden, N.Y. He also leaves his sister Martha Burke, niece Susan, and nephews Michael and Timothy Burke '78.

died at his home in Manchester, N.H., on May 1 after a long illness. An English major at the College, Paul earned a law degree at the University of Southern California in 1955. He stayed in California to practice law until his return in the mid-1960s to his hometown of Manchester, where he was engaged in the container business and in investments. It was at this time that Paul, who was the third person in the United States to have a successful kidney transplant, was instrumental in the passage of legislation in Massachusetts which granted an individual the right to donate his body or organs for medical purposes. Among his lifelong interests was his study of Eastern philosophy. He is survived by his wife, Ann, and his son Matthew, as well as several nieces and nephews.
