JOHN LINDLEY GRAY died March 3, 1971, in Englewood, Colo., following a long illness. His former wife, Carol, writes that Jack had been out of touch with the College. They were married in 1945 and divorced in 1964.

Jack came to Dartmouth from Tabor Academy. He majored in English and was a member of Beta Theta Pi and Dragon. Unfortunately we have little information on his life after graduation other than that he returned to the Denver area. The writer well remembers Jack as an extrovert country boy who took a great deal of good-natured kidding from us but gave back as much as he took and was a popular person for it.

He leaves three children; Linda Gray Tambllyn, John Jr., and Cynthia Norton Gray; all of Englewood.

LAWRENCE JACKSON SHEFFIELD died after a brief illness in New York City on March 9, 1971. His widow, Mary, wrote a short note to the College but gave no further details. They lived at 160 East 48th St.

as being a real cloak-and-dagger affair, akin to the doings of 009. We had word a year ago that he had returned to New York and was looking around for "something that will provide at least as much satisfaction as money but I find too many leads preferring to 'do people' rather than 'do business'."

The College only recently learned of the death of COLIN LOUIS RAUBESON at North Troy, Vt., on June 3, 1967. While we know little of his activities since graduation, Colin was one of the best known members, and probably the most controversial member, of the Class in our undergraduate days.

He was the oldest member of the Class, having been born on November 2, 1917. Colin attended Hopkinton (Mass.) High School in the mid 1930's and apparently dropped out. During World War II, he served 40 months with the U. S. Army, reaching the rank of Master Sergeant. Following discharge, he completed his preparatory education at Tabor Academy, where he was graduated cum laude.

College records disclose that Colin arrived in Hanover with a wife and three children. He was an English major and joined the College debate team for a while. He attracted the most attention as president of the Jefferson Club, which brought numerous controversial speakers to the campus.

In those days of the late Senator Joseph McCarthy, Colin will be remembered by many alumni for his participation in a debate in 105 Dartmouth Hall on New Hampshire Hart Bill, which would have prohibited the teaching of Communism. The debate concluded with guffaws when State Senator Hart stated that he "had begun to think that 'teach' was the wrong adjective."

Colin testified before the New Hampshire legislature on more than one occasion in opposition to proposed "anti-subversive" bills. As a senior, he ran on the Progressive Party ticket against now U. S. Senator Norris Cotton for the U. S. House of Representatives. He took a job as practice teacher at Lebanon, N. H. High School because he was one of the signers of a letter to the Manchester Union Leader attacking publisher William Loeb for an editorial attacking alleged "Perverts in Washington," primarily in the State Department.

We know little of Colin's career subsequent to graduation other than that he taught high school English, first in Maine and then in Vermont. He was apparently divorced from his first wife and remarried in 1952 and had four children by that marriage.
