

John Frederick Williams

Died: February 11, 1974

John died at the age of 34 after a short illness in Columbus, Ohio, on Monday, February 11, 1974.

He grew up in Ipswich, Massachusetts, and went to high school there. He was on the student council in his senior year, and on the newspaper and yearbook. He sang in the glee club.

At Dartmouth John majored in English and was a member of Gamma Delta Chi. In his first two years at the college he was on the staff of the Jack-O-Lantern, and as a junior was in the pre-law club.

After doing a stint with Dun & Bradstreet in Toledo and Cleveland as a credit reporter and financial analyst, he went to Indiana University and studied for a master's degree and a Ph.D. degree in English.

At the time of his death, John was an assistant professor of English at Ohio State University in Columbus. No other information about John or his career is available.

He had two sons, John IV and Joseph.
