

Anthony “Arro” Emile Beaulieu

Anthony Beaulieu, 68, of Portland, Oregon died on October 2, 2010. He was born on August 27, 1942 in San Francisco, California into a musical family. He came to Dartmouth from Abraham Lincoln High School in San Francisco. He pursued his love of the piano at Dartmouth, became a Senior Fellow and graduated with a major in music. He’s described by a fellow musician as a “sweet and tolerant artistic person who wouldn’t harm a flea.” While an undergraduate he performed major piano works, including the Bach D minor and Beethoven B-flat major concertos. Significantly, even during college he performed widely throughout the northeast.

Immediately after graduation, he signed up to go to Mississippi with the Freedom Riders to help register African-American voters during the civil rights struggle of the '60s. Subsequently, he returned to Boston to further his studies in piano and music theory. He performed in numerous solo and chamber concerts in New England, Vancouver, B.C., Lincoln, Neb., and the San Francisco Bay Area. Arro met his future wife Aase at a professional workshop for musicians and teachers.

They lived in Lincoln, Nebraska, Sebastopol, California and Ebeltoft, Denmark, before moving to Portland in 2004, where Arro established a piano studio and school. Arro and Aase have a son Soren and a daughter Christine. Arro appreciated beauty, tried to find the best in others and left the world a bit better.
